SUITE FOR ORGAN
(including the Trumpet Voluntary)

John Stanley
Transcribed and arranged by HENRY COLEMAN
JOHN STANLEY

JOHN STANLEY was a contemporary and friend of Handel. He was completely blind from the age of two, but in spite of this he was greatly admired both as a composer and as an executant, and Handel himself was often to be seen, with other famous musicians of the day, listening to Stanley’s performances on the Organ of the Temple Church, London, where he was Organist for more than fifty years.

His compositions for the Organ have been extensively revived during recent times, and now form a regular feature of Recital Programmes. These pieces, taken from Op. 6, No. 5, and Op. 7, No. 3 in the collection originally called Voluntaries, have been grouped together by the editor to form a Suite, and have been freely transcribed for the modern organ.

The phrasing indications in the third movement (Trumpet Voluntary) are not to be interpreted as legato marks. The movement should be played throughout in a pointed manner.
